

Replay Tick Data

Features | intermediate | 3 min read | DeepDOM Help Center | August 24, 2026

The Tick Data Replay function lets you replay a past trading session as if it were happening in real time, with the option to practice simulated trading alongside it. This feature is especially useful for users who are still learning, and since it does not require a live data feed, it is also a great way to study new financial instruments before purchasing their data subscription.

How to Access Tick Data Replay

You do not need an active data feed to use this feature. To get started:

Make sure the feed is disconnected. If not, then disconnect the feed before using the replay tool.

Note: Replay is only available for previous sessions. The current trading day's session is not available for replay. You can replay any session from yesterday or earlier.

Step 3 – Start the Replay

Once everything is configured:

Click Set — the platform will load the selected session

Click Play to begin playback

Click Pause at any time to stop the replay

Use the Speed section to increase the playback speed

Click Reset to stop the replay completely

Simulated Trading

While the replay is running, you can practice placing orders as if you were trading in real time:

Enable the Trading Panel or the Chart DOM from the toolbar

Place orders in simulated mode directly on the chart

The simulation behaves like a live session, allowing you to test strategies without any real risk

Conclusion

Tick Data Replay is one of the most valuable tools for traders at any stage. Use it to review past sessions, study new instruments without a data subscription, and build confidence through simulated trading before going live.
