Common Issues | beginner | 2 min read | DeepDOM Help Center | August 24, 2026

If you have problems activating DeepDom with your license code, work through the following checklist. These steps resolve most issues related to invalid licenses, multiple sessions, or blocked connections to the licensing server.

Step 1 – Check Your Subscription Status

Confirm that your DeepDom subscription is active in the DeepDom website customer portal. Expired or cancelled subscriptions will prevent new license activations even if you still have the old license email.

Step 2 – Make Sure Only One Session Is Active

DeepDom licenses typically allow only one active session per license. If the platform is already open on another computer, or if a previous session did not close correctly, the new login may be rejected.

Close DeepDom on all other machines, wait a few minutes for the session to expire, and then try again. If necessary, restart Windows to ensure no background DeepDom processes are still running.

Step 3 – Verify Email and License Code

Carefully copy and paste the email address and license code from your welcome message into the activation form. Avoid typing them manually to prevent mistakes such as extra spaces, swapped characters, or missing digits.

Step 4 – Check the Hosts File Configuration

The Windows hosts file maps domain names to IP addresses before DNS is queried. An incorrect entry in this file can block DeepDom from reaching the license server, even if your Internet connection is otherwise working.

If you or another application has modified the hosts file, review it and remove any lines that redirect the DeepDom / Volumetric Trading license domains to invalid IP addresses. Always follow a trusted guide when editing the hosts file, and create a backup before making changes.

Step 5 – When Problems Persist

If the license still does not activate after completing the steps above, contact support with the following information:

Your license code and the email address used for registration.

A screenshot of the exact error message.

Your Windows version and whether you recently changed hardware or reinstalled the operating system.

Providing these details will help the support team quickly reset or correct your license if needed.
